

New Texas Law Says Franchisors Generally Not Employers of Franchisees' Workers

By Kristin L. Bauer and Philip B. Rosen

July 13, 2015

The Texas Labor Code has been amended to provide that a franchisor is not considered an employer for claims related to employment discrimination, wage payment, the Texas Minimum Wage Act, and the Texas Workers' Compensation Act, among other laws. According to S.B. 652, this is so unless the franchisor has been found by a state court of competent jurisdiction to have exercised a type or degree of control over its franchisee or its franchisee's employees not customarily exercised by a franchisor for the purpose of protecting the franchisor's trademarks and brand. The amendment goes into effect on September 1, 2015.

The bill was introduced by state Senator Charles Schwertner, reportedly because of franchisors' concerns that recent National Labor Relations Board actions targeted franchisors for franchisees' labor law violations. The NLRB's General Counsel has issued unfair labor practice complaints asserting that certain franchisors are "joint employers" with their franchisees who allegedly have violated employees' rights. This has opened franchisors to lawsuits for the actions of franchisees, critics assert. Current NLRB decisions treat two companies as joint employers only if both exercise a significant degree of direct control over the same employees. Direct control requires that putative joint employers have control over terms and conditions of employment of the subject employees. This includes hiring and firing, setting work hours, determining compensation and benefits, and exercising day-to-day supervision.

Senator Schwertner commented that the NLRB actions "called the common understanding of a franchisor-franchisee relationship into question...." That common understanding is that a franchisee is responsible for all employment decisions regarding employees of the franchisee and the franchisor has no interaction with or authority over the franchisee's employees.

Despite the new law's protection for franchisors in Texas, it is uncertain how the exception — in this case, the type of control exerted by a franchisor that is not customarily exercised to protect a franchisor's trademark and brand — will be interpreted. Although the NLRB General Counsel's actions may have been the catalyst for the new Texas law, because of the strong pre-emptive reach of the NLRA, it is unlikely that the law will affect NLRB decision-making about joint employment. Many believe the Board's analysis of the issue is likely to change in the not-too-distant future. In a brief filed with the Board in connection with Browning-Ferris Industries (Case 32-RC-109684), the NLRB's General Counsel has urged the Board to abandon the current "direct control" joint-employer standard and replace it with a "totality of the circumstances" test — one based on whether an alleged joint-employer exercises either direct or indirect control over the subject employees who work for another employer, and even to consider whether the alleged joint-employer has "unexercised potential to control working conditions" of those employees.

Jackson Lewis attorneys are available to answer inquiries regarding this and other developments.

©2020 Jackson Lewis P.C. This material is provided for informational purposes only. It is not intended to constitute legal advice nor does it create a client-lawyer relationship between Jackson Lewis and any recipient. Recipients should consult with counsel before taking any actions based on the information contained within this material. This material may be considered attorney advertising in some jurisdictions. Prior results do not guarantee a similar outcome.

Focused on labor and employment law since 1958, Jackson Lewis P.C.'s 950+ attorneys located in major

Meet the Authors

Kristin L. Bauer

Principal
Dallas 214-520-2400
Email

Philip B. Rosen

Principal
New York Metro
New York City 212-545-4001
Email

cities nationwide consistently identify and respond to new ways workplace law intersects business. We help employers develop proactive strategies, strong policies and business-oriented solutions to cultivate high-functioning workforces that are engaged, stable and diverse, and share our clients' goals to emphasize inclusivity and respect for the contribution of every employee. For more information, visit <https://www.jacksonlewis.com>.

©2020 Jackson Lewis P.C. All rights reserved. Attorney Advertising. Prior results do not guarantee a similar outcome. No client-lawyer relationship has been established by the posting or viewing of information on this website.

*The National Operations Center serves as the firm's central administration hub and houses the firm's Facilities, Finance, Human Resources and Technology departments.