Avoid Sexual and Other Harassment

The Connecticut Sexual Harassment Education and Training in the Workplace Act requires employers with at least 50 employees to provide “supervisory employees” with at least two hours of training on sexual harassment. Some of your supervisors may have missed the company’s training. Also, newly hired or appointed supervisors must attend the training within six months of becoming a supervisor.

Who Should Attend

The briefings are designed for supervisory employees (defined as anyone “who can assign” work), as well as decision makers with employee relations responsibilities such as human resource professionals, chief executive officers and in-house counsel.

In-House Training

In addition to these regularly scheduled programs, Jackson Lewis also offers in-house training customized for your company.
