Catherine Tucciarello is an associate in the New York City, New York office of Jackson Lewis P.C. Catherine's employment litigation practice includes defending employers against claims of discrimination, retaliation, disability accommodation and wage and hour violations. Catherine also counsels her clients on a diverse range of employment matters, including workplace harassment and discrimination disputes, reasonable accommodations, and legal compliance.

Catherine's practice also focuses on internal workplace investigations regarding discrimination, harassment, retaliation, and ethical and policy violations.

In her Privacy, Data and Cybersecurity practice, Catherine provides guidance to organizations on data breach prevention and response, and advises clients in various industries on compliance with federal and international privacy laws.

During law school, Catherine served as the managing editor of the Seton Hall Circuit Review, and the director of the Appellate Advocacy program
