12:00 PM - 1:00 PM EST

Over the last thirty years, the False Claims Act (FCA) has become the federal government’s most effective tool in combating fraud. Even under the more “business friendly” Trump Administration, the Department of Justice continues to aggressively enforce the FCA. The whistleblower bar is aggressive, well-funded, and brings an increasing number of claims each year. For companies who do business with, or receive money from, the federal government, having a more in depth understanding of the law and the current landscape can help minimize their FCA risk. Please join us as we explore recent developments in whistleblower litigation under the federal False Claims Act.

Topics
- A brief overview of the False Claims Act and its significance;
- Developments in False Claims Act enforcement under the Trump Administration; and
- Strategies for minimizing exposure to both fraud and retaliation claims under the False Claims Act.
