Nigel L. Wilkinson is a Principal in the Washington, D.C. Region, office of Jackson Lewis P.C. He is an experienced first chair trial attorney representing management in a wide variety of employment law matters.

Mr. Wilkinson has more than 20 years of employment-related experience and focuses on defending employers against claims of discrimination, harassment, retaliation, wrongful termination; litigating noncompete and non-solicitation issues, and trade secret theft claims; and advising employers on ways to avoid and mitigate such claims. He both prosecutes and defends contract and tort claims, such as defamation, breaches of fiduciary duty, and conspiracy. Mr. Wilkinson works with employers to develop and implement various employment policies and handbooks, depending on the employer's needs.

In all matters, whether it be for counseling or litigation, Mr. Wilkinson works closely with employers to understand their business and provide personalized advice that suits their objectives. Some of Mr. Wilkinson's notable litigation experience includes:

- Representing a large national defense contractor in multiple cases prosecuting various trade secret, patent infringement and employment contract claims, before the federal district and appellate courts;
- Representing a global technology company against former senior executive's multi-million-dollar wrongful termination claim;
- Serving as lead trial counsel in contract dispute for a channel on one of the largest video-sharing platforms in America;
- Successfully defending a national clothing retailer against multiple FMLA, Title VII, and retaliation claims, and various EEOC charges;
- Performing as lead trial counsel winning a favorable jury verdict in conversion and breach of fiduciary duty case;
- Serving as lead counsel successfully defending small media company against large foreign-based bank's defamation claims;
- Serving as lead trial counsel in prosecuting constitutional and civil rights claims against the District of Columbia, ultimately securing a favorable settlement;
- Serving as lead counsel defending a national staffing company against discrimination and wrongful termination claims;
- Successfully defending a large national insurance company in multimillion-dollar breach of contract case;
- Representing Dominican plaintiffs in defamation action against a documentary filmmaker; and
- Successfully defending regional retailer against multiple age discrimination claims.

Mr. Wilkinson began his career in the legal profession as a paralegal, and later earned his J.D. while attending law school at night.

In Mr. Wilkinson's spare time, he tinkers with a couple of old cars his wife lets him keep in his garage and builds electric guitars in his basement.
