Stacey J. Lococo is an associate in the Long Island, New York, office of Jackson Lewis P.C. Her practice focuses on representing employers in workplace law matters, including pre-litigation claims, litigation, and preventative advice and counseling.

A trained social worker, Stacey earned her master's degree in nonprofit management and administration from Rutgers University and worked for a variety of nonprofit organizations in both fundraising and administrative capacities for seven years. Stacey's work with diverse populations such as the LGBTQ+ community, the elderly, children, individuals with mental illnesses, and low-income urban communities equipped her with a holistic understanding of the issues facing employers in various industries and a variety of settings.

While attending law school, Stacey interned with the Office of the Attorney General of the State of New York, The United States Attorney's Office, and the Honorable Mae D'Agostino. She completed an externship with the Office of General Counsel for the State University of New York while simultaneously serving as the Volume 7 executive editor for State Constitutional Commentary and Symposium for the Albany Law Review.

Before joining Jackson Lewis, Stacey represented physicians, healthcare providers, and major New York metropolitan area teaching hospitals in medical malpractice and employment actions.
