

Bipartisan Infrastructure Law

The impact of President Biden's Bipartisan Infrastructure Act will be far-reaching, in particular for employers in the construction, manufacturing, and energy industries.

Bipartisan Infrastructure Law

President Biden's Bipartisan Infrastructure Law allocates $1.2 trillion in investments for various transportation, water, power and energy, environmental remediation, cybersecurity, and broadband initiatives. The increased funding will likely result in more companies being classified as government contractors, implicating increased compliance issues, as well as wage and hour considerations at the state and federal levels.

Infrastructure Law Podcast Series

We have created a special We Get Work™ podcast series on the Bipartisan Infrastructure Law to examine the impact on labor law, the construction industry, the government contractors, wage and hour implications, immigration issues, and what companies need to be aware of when they are awarded work created by this landmark piece of legislation.

Part One: Traditional Labor Practice Effects of the New Infrastructure Law

Principals Dion Kohler and Brian Lundgren discuss the IIJA, what project labor agreements mean for construction contractors and sub-contractors, and how employers can simultaneously maintain compliance and thrive as a business.

Part Two: Biden's Infrastructure Bill: Construction Industry's Affirmative Action Obligations

Of Counsel Christopher Chrisbens, and Associate Lisa Marsh, discuss OFCCP matters and how contractors and subcontractors ensure compliance with their affirmative action obligations after receiving federal funding for projects related to the Infrastructure Investment and Jobs Act.

Part Three: I-9 and E-Verify: Modern Day Siblings

Associates Zain Abidi and Benjamin Lau discuss what employers
