In addition to her litigation and counseling practice, Jesse has experience in the entertainment and media space. She has previously worked on cases involving high-profile clients, including a talent and entertainment PR firm and a celebrity owned production company. She also gained hands-on industry exposure through internships with a globally recognized media brand known for its documentary-style programming and a boutique entertainment firm. This background equips her with a unique understanding of workplace dynamics within the entertainment industry, allowing her to provide tailored legal counsel to media and entertainment professionals.

Jesse is known for her ability to develop thoughtful and creative solutions to complex workplace issues. Her practice focuses on defending employers against claims of discrimination, harassment, wrongful termination, and wage and hour violations. She also advises companies on best practices for compliance with labor and employment laws, including the development of company policies and procedures.
