Vladislav Lobatchev is an eDiscovery attorney in the Hartford, Connecticut, office of Jackson Lewis P.C. With a strong background in the physical sciences and information technology, Vlad leverages his comprehensive knowledge of data and technology to deliver innovative and efficient solutions for employers facing complex litigation challenges.

Vlad draws on both his technical and legal industry experience to collaborate with employers, implementing innovative technological solutions to enhance discovery workflows. He has a particular proficiency in designing and applying cutting-edge AI and machine learning solutions to minimize electronically stored information (ESI) costs. Vlad's extensive e-discovery knowledge and creative approach to problem solving benefits clients by allowing them to effectively leverage the latest in legal technology tools while retaining defensibility over the e-discovery process on their matters.

Prior to joining Jackson Lewis, Vlad was a director of the data science services department at an international e-Discovery vendor company. In that role, he guided multiple AM Law 100 firms and Fortune 500 companies through the complexities of e-discovery on state, federal and cross-border matters and regulatory investigations.
