Dylan has briefed and argued over 50 appeals before numerous federal and state appellate courts. In addition to appeals and writs, Dylan focuses his practice on unfair competition and trade secrets law, having second chaired a three-month unfair competition jury trial.

Dylan also handles all aspects of litigation in cases involving discrimination, harassment, disability, and wage and hour issues, including taking and defending depositions, briefing and arguing dispositive motions, and participating in mediations and settlement conferences. In addition to Dylan's litigation practice, he counsels employers on unfair competition, discrimination, harassment, and wage and hour issues.

Dylan has lectured on ethics and appellate law and litigation tactics. Dylan has also published articles on these and related topics. His article on statutory interpretation was cited by a California court of appeal.

Prior to joining Jackson Lewis in 2007, Dylan had a general litigation practice and also litigated federal civil rights class actions.
