Gabrielle Sferra is an associate in the White Plains, New York, office of Jackson Lewis P.C. A former associate producer of studio productions and films, Gabrielle leverages her unique insight into the industry as a member of the firm's Entertainment and Media Group.

Gabrielle's practice focuses on representing management in employment litigation and workplace law matters, including preventive advice and counseling and labor relations. Working on projects for major studios like HBO and Disney, as well as indie documentaries, provided Gabrielle with a unique appreciation for how to approach a similar legal issue based on each client's specific needs and tolerance for risk. Gabrielle's experience on set informs her collaborative approach to managing workplace and labor issues with the goal of creating and maintaining stable employer-employee relationships. Gabrielle understands the disruptive impact litigation can have on businesses and strives to craft proactive and preventative legal strategies, including advice and counsel to keep operations running smoothly.

While attending law school, Gabrielle was a member of the St. John's Law Review, as well as President of the Intellectual Property Law Society and Director of Publications for the Labor Relations and Employment Law Society.
