Chris Patrick is a Principal in the Denver office of Jackson Lewis P.C. and a leader in the firm's Diversity Counseling and Affirmative Action Compliance and OFCCP Defense practice groups, and its Pay Equity resource group.

Chris advises employers on developing and implementing policies that reduce legal risk and support workplace fairness. Known for his business-minded and client-centered approach, he tailors his advice to the specific needs, goals, and operating realities of each client.

To align legal strategy with business priorities, Chris collaborates closely with the firm's analysts, statisticians, and data scientists to deliver data-informed legal guidance that is both strategic and actionable. He serves as relationship manager for several large national employers, leading cross-practice teams to deliver high-value, cost-effective counsel across jurisdictions.

Representative matters include:

- Analyzing hiring, promotion, pay, and performance practices using regression and other statistical tools to ensure non-discrimination.
- Advising on pay transparency laws and helping clients align practices with evolving disclosure requirements.
- Counseling and risk assessment on employer diversity programs, policies, and training to align with federal and state anti-discrimination requirements.
- Designing and defending affirmative action plans under Section 503 (disability) and VEVRAA (veterans).
- Counseling on state-level affirmative action and non-discrimination obligations.
- Guiding the design and implementation of compliant applicant tracking systems.
- Navigating conflicting state laws and risks around data collection and reporting.
- Assessing EEO-related risks in mergers, acquisitions, restructurings, and reductions in force.

Outside the office, Chris enjoys traveling, discovering new restaurants, a good hammock, and exploring Colorado with his wife and two children.
