Andrew D. Kinghorn is a principal in the St. Louis, Missouri, office of Jackson Lewis P.C. Dedicated to helping employers prevent and resolve costly employee workplace disputes, he partners with clients to understand their business objectives while reducing legal risk in a way that is tailored to their needs.

Andrew is an adept trial attorney and skillful advocate for employers before administrative agencies, and in federal, state and appellate courts. He applies a business-oriented approach, which has enabled him to serve as a trusted advisor to employers of all sizes, in a variety of industries, and in both the private and public sectors.

Clients regularly turn to Andrew to conduct workplace training and investigations, and to perform audits of their employment and labor policies and procedures. He provides guidance to employers on best practices and strategies to minimize their financial exposure or avoid litigation altogether. By virtue of his significant courtroom experience, Andrew is well-positioned to provide employers with thoughtful advice and recommendations tailored to the unique issues that may arise after a claim is filed, and to help them make well-informed and strategic decisions.

Drawing on his background as an assistant attorney general for the State of Missouri in the office's Civil Litigation Division, Andrew works efficiently to get to the heart of the issue in any litigation to bring the matter to a swift and favorable conclusion. During his time with the State, he was the lead defense attorney on numerous cases and a key member of the office's Missouri Human Rights Act Task Force, handling some of the State's most complex and high value employment and labor matters, as well as cases involving contract and constitutional law.

Andrew has been a passionate advocate for employers throughout his career. He graduated from law school with honors, earning a concentration in employment law. In practice, he has represented countless employers, published articles, and presented at conferences on legal issues affecting employers.
