Andrew Bellwoar is an associate in the Washington, D.C. Region office of Jackson Lewis P.C. He works with clients to achieve their goals, providing a wholistic approach to advise them on a wide range of topics to avoid litigation where possible, then rigorously defend them when litigation is unavoidable.

Andrew's practice focuses primarily on wage and hour issues, class actions, and other complex litigation. He represents clients before state and federal courts, as well as government agencies such as the U.S. Department of Labor, Maryland Department of Labor, Virginia Department of Labor and Industry, Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, and more. He is involved in every step of the litigation process, and he has a proven track record of success in defending employers, obtaining summary judgment and other favorable rulings on all manner of claims. His hands-on approach and guidance help clients feel at ease throughout the entire process.

In addition to his litigation practice, Andrew provides advice and counsel to clients to help them avoid litigation on topics including the Fair Labor Standards Act, the Davis-Bacon and Related Acts, the Service Contract Act, Title VII, the Age Discrimination in Employment Act, the Americans with Disabilities Act, the Family and Medical Leave Act, and related state laws. He also provides workplace trainings to employees, managers, and directors to address systemic issues and promote positive company culture.

Prior to joining Jackson Lewis, Andrew worked with a general litigation law firm in New Jersey where he served as lead counsel in a variety of matters, gaining valuable experience litigating and managing all aspects of cases.

Andrew is a Pennsylvania native and has lived and worked throughout the Mid-Atlantic United States. He lives in Virginia with his wife, daughter, and two dogs. Andrew is an avid soccer fan and player, and he is also involved in local charities focused on promoting leadership in impoverished communities through team sports and performance art.
