

House Seeks to Block Proposed Amendments to Title IX Regulations

By Susan D. Friedfel, Amanda B. Brody &

December 12, 2019

Meet the Authors

Susan D. Friedfel

Principal
914-872-8027
Susan.Friedfel@jacksonlewis.com

Amanda B. Brody

Associate
Amanda.Brody@jacksonlewis.com

Related Services

Higher Education
Sexual Harassment
Sports

©2019 Jackson Lewis P.C. This material is provided for informational purposes only. It is not intended to constitute legal advice nor does it create a client-lawyer relationship between Jackson Lewis and any recipient. Recipients should consult with counsel before taking any actions based on the information contained within this material. This material may be considered attorney advertising in some jurisdictions. Prior results do not guarantee a similar outcome.

Focused on employment and labor law since 1958, Jackson Lewis P.C.'s 1,000+ attorneys located in major cities nationwide consistently identify and respond to new ways workplace law intersects business. We help employers develop proactive strategies, strong policies and business-oriented solutions to cultivate high-functioning workforces that are engaged and stable, and share our clients' goals to emphasize belonging and respect for the contributions of every employee. For more information, visit <https://www.jacksonlewis.com>.

Four congresspersons have introduced legislation in the House of Representatives aiming to block the Department of Education's proposed amendments to the Title IX regulations on how colleges and universities must handle allegations of sexual misconduct from taking effect.

The bill, introduced on December 10, 2019, would prohibit Secretary of Education Betsy DeVos from taking any action to implement the proposed revisions to the Title IX regulations published on November 29, 2018. The bill also would prohibit the Secretary from proposing or issuing any substantially similar amendments or rules. The stated purpose of the bill is to prevent "certain rules that weaken the enforcement of the prohibition of sex discrimination applicable under title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972."

The Department of Education received well over 100,000 comments during the 60-day public comment period following publication of its proposed regulations. The proposed regulations have not been finalized, but the Department of Education reportedly has transmitted its final version to the Office of Management and Budget for review, suggesting that the final regulations will be published early in 2020. (For details of the proposed regulations, see our article, Department of Education Unveils Proposed Title IX Regulations.)

As originally proposed, the regulations would, among other changes:

- Prevent universities from investigating off-campus sexual harassment;
- Narrow the definition of "sexual harassment" to mean "unwelcome conduct on the basis of sex that is so severe, pervasive and objectively offensive that it denies a person access to the school's education program or activity"; and
- Hold universities to a "deliberately indifferent" standard for agency enforcement and require universities to hold hearings in which any party or witness would be subject to cross-examination by the opposing party's advisor.

Jackson Lewis' Higher Education team is well-versed in Title IX issues and can answer your questions. We will continue to monitor and provide updates on developments in this area.