Employment Law Daily Wrap Up

Former Manning & Kass attorney Elizabeth "Liz" Murphy has joined Jackson Lewis P.C. as Principal in the firm's Los Angeles office. Murphy brings to Jackson Lewis more than 20 years of experience in employment litigation, having handled multiple litigation matters, including class actions and serving as first-chair in several employment arbitration cases. She has prepared, argued, and prevailed in many summary judgment motions, and focuses her practice in the field of home health care through extensive lecturing and counseling work in support of home care employers throughout the state of California.

The new Principal's experience includes advising employers in day-to-day management, such as handling sensitive terminations, preparing and negotiating employment and severance agreements, preparing and revising employee handbooks, training management and staff, and administering leaves of absence; and representing employers in wrongful termination, discrimination, sexual harassment, wage and hour, and other employment-related litigation in state and federal court, arbitration, and before various governmental agencies such as the Department of Fair Employment and Housing, the EEOC, the Division of Labor Standards Enforcement, the Employment Development Department, and the DOL.
