Workplace legal giant Jackson Lewis P.C. has named Victor Barkalov as its Chief Digital Officer. In that role, Barkalov will lead every aspect of the firm's client-facing digital products and services and ensure that IT operations are geared toward providing best-in-class client service that leverages Big Data analytics and Artificial Intelligence solutions.

In addition to being a CPA, Barkalov earned an MBA from Columbia University and a BS from the Stern School of Business at NYU. Before joining Jackson Lewis from Curtis Mallet, he worked for Merrill Lynch supporting and automating front office procedures.

"We pride ourselves on recognizing the importance of staying ahead of the curve and putting our clients first," said Firm Chairman Vincent A. Cino said in an announcement. "Since joining Jackson Lewis just two years ago as Vice President of Strategic Planning, Victor has played a pivotal role in several innovative firm projects at Jackson Lewis. We created the Chief Digital Officer position to lead the firm's continued transformation into a digital powerhouse, and it is our pleasure to appoint Victor Barkalov to this new and exciting role."

Attorneys: (Jackson Lewis).
